Septage Receiving Station Expansion-Dewatering Project

The Livingston County Septage Receiving Station (SRS) was constructed in May 2007, along with a County-wide ban on land application of septage, which provided a more environmentally sound disposal method of septage for residents. The SRS is located on Runyan Lake Road in Hartland Township and is a County owned and operated facility that accepts domestic septage waste that is pumped from septic tanks where residents are not connected to a sewer system. The waste goes to the Genesee County Water Resource Recovery Facility (WRRF) where it is treated. The volumes accepted at the SRS continue to grow annually. Initial projections assumed a maximum volume of up to 12 million gallons, and the station is now projected to reach 30 million gallons in 2019. This increase in volume has caused the SRS to exceed its permit limits set by Genesee County, which in turn is causing a strain on the WRRF. As a result, Genesee County has issued a Corrective Action Plan that requires installation of a press facility at the existing SRS. The press facility will remove the solids that cause the septage to exceed permit limits, thereby eliminating the stress on the WRRF. Construction is planned to begin in fall 2019 and be completed by late summer 2020.
